ETFO SUPPORTS THE TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION'S (TRC) CALLS TO ACTION

ETFO understands that it is integral for educators to move forward into reconciliation with the Indigenous Peoples of Canada. In 2015, ETFO endorsed the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's (TRC) Calls to Action. It is ETFO's hope to educate and inform its members on the diversity of Indigenous Peoples in Canada, provide information on the complex historical and current relationship between Canada and Indigenous nations, and provide a dialogue to dispel common myths and misconceptions of Indigenous Peoples.

To support members in their learning and instructional practices to integrate First Nations, Métis and Inuit (FNMI) perspectives, worldviews and content in a positive approach. ETFO works with FNMI ETFO members, allies and Indigenous Peoples to develop authentic and relevant resources and professional learning opportunities.

This resource respectfully acknowledges #62 and #63 of the Calls to Action (2015, p. 7).

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

INTRODUCTION

“Activism and advocacy are tools that are used to bring about social or political changes. However, there is a distinctive difference between activism and advocacy based on the manner in which these changes are brought about. Advocacy refers to the act or process of supporting a cause or proposal, whereas activism is the action of using vigorous campaigning to bring about change” (Difference Between, 2016).

This companion resource was developed for educators to use alongside the 2016 ETFO poster celebrating twenty-one First Nations, Métis and Inuit women in Canada for their contributions and advocacy work. The purpose of this resource is to support educators in their instructional approaches to teaching about social justice and advocacy while learning about Indigenous Peoples, specifically the women honoured in the poster.

This resource includes the following:

- A hyperlink text version of the poster includes a brief overview of each woman and the activism and advocacy work they are doing.
- Activity prompts that are connected to the poster.
- A hyperlink resource list is included to complement social justice and advocacy.

You are welcome to modify or create your activities that support your students’ learning and your instructional practice.

ACTIVISTS AND ADVOCATES

“An activist is a person who makes an intentional action to bring about social or political change. An advocate is one who speaks on behalf of another person or group” (Jenn T. Grace, 2017).

The twenty-one Indigenous women celebrated in the poster are all activists and advocates through the work they do in their communities. In looking at the various capacities and experiences these women have, their roles in social justice can be organized in five areas. These are organized to assist you in designing your own activities and instructional planning.

- Leadership Roles: This could include being a founder or founding member, lawyer, minister, senator, executive director, ambassador, award recipient, spokesperson, owner, youth representative and/or athlete.
- Writers: This includes working as an author, journalist, storyteller, playwright, poet and/or historian.
- Artists: This includes working as a visual artist, musician, singer, filmmaker, actor and/or fashion designer.
- Educators: This includes being an educator, teacher, scholar, instructor, professor, or lecturer.
- Environmental & Human Rights: This includes working to protect the climate, land and water, cultural, language, persons with disabilities and/or human rights.

Activism and advocacy is something that everyone can do, no matter what age. There are many examples of activism campaigns that people can use. To help inspire you in your instructional practice of social justice, watch the short ETFO video, Women change makers: Taking action for social justice.

ACTIVITY PROMPTS

The six areas of activities are intended to help students learn about the social justice issues and the advocacy and activism work that the Indigenous women do in our communities. They will also have an opportunity to research, make connections and demonstrate ways to support Indigenous Peoples in standing up for issues important to them, the bigger community and the natural environment. Note: Several prompts were adapted from A Social Justice Approach (Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, 2013).

CREATE A WORD WALL

- Research the twenty-one First Nations, Métis and Inuit women in the poster and define the words of their accomplishments. Create a collage of words that express the gifts of each woman.
- To get you started, define and discuss the following terms and create a word wall. You are encouraged to add more words to this word wall as you learn about each woman and their contributions.

Advocacy
Activism
Social Justice
Human Rights

Indigenous Peoples
First Nations
Métis
Inuit and Inuk
Environmentalism

CREATE A DISPLAY

- Create a list of accomplishments achieved by the women.
- Identify personal skills and accomplishments of the students. They can draw a picture of themselves and include a list of images or words of things that they are gifted in.
- Create a goal-setting map and set up how to achieve them. Draw a map of the journey to get there and celebrate the achievements.
- Create a map of where all the women come from. Research the communities or regions that each woman comes from and include images from that region.
- Research the career roles that each woman has and provide information on each.
- Compile issues that the women are addressing and find any newspaper clippings (online or in print) and research on where that issue is at currently. Create an informational piece to display.
- Create posters that show why social justice advocacy is important.
- Create a class commitment to social justice and equity.

WRITING AND RESEARCH

- Connect with a First Nations, Métis or Inuit school community and write pen-pal letters.
- Write a letter to one of the women acknowledging their work while making a personal connection to what they do.
- Create a letter to support the woman and what she is advocating.
- Read one of the books or articles written by the women and write a summary about it.
- Create interview questions that students would like to ask any of the women.
- Write a poem about one of the issues addressed or to acknowledge the advocacy work being done.

- Write a letter to a local MP or write a newspaper report supporting an issue that the women are standing up for.
- Research the origin of any of the issues the women address and write what is being done about it.
- Identify other people who are advocating for the same issues as these women. Create a list and share with classmates.
- Research Aboriginal Rights, Treaty Rights, s. 35 of the Constitution Act, s. 25 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and discuss why Indigenous Peoples have specific rights to them that differ from Canadians (e.g., they are the original inhabitants and their rights and practices were recognized and affirmed).

ENVIRONMENTAL STEWARDSHIP

- Discuss what leadership and environmental stewardship are and plan with your students what they can do to become a steward.
- Invite students to write a story on leadership and environmentalism.
- Take students out on the land for a walk and learn about the natural habitat in your area.
- Assess the impact of different human activities on the natural environment. Plan and discuss ways to leave a healthier footprint on the planet.
- Learn about water issues in Indigenous communities and think of ways to bring awareness to this issue.
- Discuss the positive impacts each woman has on the community and/or environment.
- Go for a walk in nature and write a list or draw things that were natural to that environment. Also, take notice of things that weren't and have a discussion as to why it's important to take care of the natural environment.

GET CREATIVE

- Cut out images from magazines and create an art piece of images and/or words that connects to leadership.
- Define hero attributes and list the hero attributes of a woman (or women) in the poster. Make a superhero poster of the woman.

- Design a book cover of one of the women and come up with a title (based on the advocacy or activism work that the woman does). The activity could be extended to include a brief, written summary of what the book is about.
- Students can create a book that includes photos or drawn images with captions of people who are inspiring to them.
- Invite students to share music from their own culture or music that they like to listen to at home. Later, listen to music by Indigenous artists (drumming, throat singing and contemporary) and talk about the song or the instruments used in the song.
- Discuss what trading cards are and create a trading card on each woman.
- Examine one of the artworks by the women and discuss the elements of design and illustrations. Discuss what they think it means to them. In their own style (and not copying the style of the artist), students can then create a work of art that is representative of the discussion.
- Discuss the importance of human rights. The class can paint a slogan and include images of words or images that connect to the topic.

INDIGENOUS PRESENCE

- Invite First Nations, Métis or Inuit guests to visit your classroom to discuss issues related to those that the women are advocating.
- Connect with the Indigenous education lead at your school board to invite an Elder or Traditional Knowledge Keeper to visit the class. Follow your school board's cultural protocols (as this will be region specific).
- Include books written by Indigenous authors. See the list of Bookstores on ETFO's FNMI education webpage.
- Have a book club using books by Indigenous authors that focus on the environment and/or leadership.
- Watch a video or podcast on one of the women and discuss what they learned.
- Listen to music created by Indigenous artists and discuss the technique and lyrics.
- Research other Indigenous activists and advocates and find a parallel to the issues to the ones that the women are standing up for. To get you started, you will find hyperlinks below.
- Have an Indigenous film night at your school and look for potential Indigenous Peoples to sit on a panel to share more insight. Connect with the Indigenous education lead at your school board for a list of movies and possible speakers.
